A Supper at Alexandre Dumas's.

A writer in Senticy's Miceding thus describes suppor given by Alexandre Dumas:
"Yesterday, at eleven o'clock in the evening, crowd of artists, literary, and sven learned ese, as also of pretty women, friends of the oct-romancer, crowded the ground floor, which, cornted for their reception, was darkling to intemplate. The most beautiful git medigal statuettes, works of modern fancy, detached, at statuettes, works of modern fancy, detached.

poet-romancer, crowded the ground floor, which, decorated for their reception, was dazuling to contemplate. The most beautiful git medieval statucties, works of modern fancy, detached themselves all round from the garnet-hued paper hangings, which were here and there soberly relieved by great golden nalls; whilst on the vast chimney the antique "Thief," in bronze, four to five feet in height, raising up its arms between two immense chims wases, flowing over with flowers and leaves, heaths and creepers, seemed to appland the great Venus of Milo, who, white and acrene, stood opposite to him on the top of a scalptured pedestal, dominating all the other statues.

"An caken flesse extended from the floor to the height of the cibow all round beneath the garnet-hued paper hangings, on one side of which was an admirable Gothic pric Dies with colored sculptures of the Annuncistion; on the other, a side table loaded with bronzes of Baryl, crystal, and chims; at each side an Algerian divan; beyond oaken arm-chairs carved in pointed srches, and on each side of the Venus of Milo, who stood opposite to the fire place, were two colossal jars full of plants and flowers. Ample curtains, of a deep-toned scarlet, hung before the three windows and the doorway.—These were spoils brought away by the post from the shoulders of smagglers of Malaga and of Seville, to whom they served as capes during the day and as beds at night.

"In the centre of the floor, covered with a great Java mat, with many colored designs, was extended the terrible spoils of a great white bear of the ley ocean, that had perhaps seem the brave and unfortunate Sir John Franklin pass by under the Arctic Pole. And, then, over all these beautiful things, imagine floods of light poured forth from lamps of all forms and by mrisds of wax candiers, modern lamps with sevesure of the stems.

centre a lastre of Bohemian glass, with leaves of green enamel, and lotus flowers in opal with golden stems.

"But it is time to go to supper; the oysters are opened. Let us descend into the little winter garden, which the poet had constructed and decorated, where was before the court-yard of the house. Figure to yourself a light dome of glass, clothed with graceful climbers and creepers, tropical plants with exotic flowers; a mid which humming birds fitted to and fro, whilst nightingaies warbied in the leaves; burning lamps and candelabra twisting their golden branches amids the foliage; and lastly, beneath this vault of light and verdure, a feast of Beishazzar. Supper was laid for sixty; the long table filled, the winter garden and the vestibule that proceded it, and which was adorned with Chinese lanterns, Japanesee vases, cabinets of lacquer, yataghans, knives and other arms.
"But instead of the sixty guests that were expected, some eighty to a hundred had come. It is always so at Alexandro Dumas's, where each friend has a right to bring his friends to do honor to the French proverb. The great table had the good fortune to possess all the ladies—Belgian, French and Spanhab—and they did justice to their hous's hospitality. The viands, the pates, the fish, the meions, the dishes of fruit and flowers, circulated with a wondrous profusion. Rhine wines were poured out in floods as an accompaniment to oysters of Ostend; the Beanne did duty to a nearly similar extent to the pates d'Amiens; champagne frapes attended upon the lobsters; whiles the grapes of Malaga and the oranges of Valence were kept company by the golden viniages of Xerres, Val de Penas, Rota, and Pajerete, compatriots of the senoras who were imbibling them in our company."

A Shot from the Right Quarter.

It will be remembered in America and England that eight years ago, an "Address" was sent to the women of this country, signed by half's million of their British sisters, imploring does to use all their influence to abolish negro slavery in this country. This remarkable document, splendidly illuminated on veilum, with all the signatures, was bound up in twenty-six folio volumes, and sent to Mrs. Harriet Beecher Slowe, to be promulgated far and wide in America. Among the ladies who first put their names to the "Address" were the wives of Lord Palmerston, Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Cowley, the Duke of Bedford, the Duke of Argyle, Earl Bussell, Baron Parke, Lord Ruthven, Mr. Gladstone, and other well-known British celebrities. The husbands of most of the signers to this address having thrown all their influence in favor of the South against the North, and bolstered up slavery with all their powerful support, Mrs. Stowe has written "A Reply" to this "Address." which will appear in the January number of the Atlantic Monthly, and she will lay before the "many thousands of the women of Great Britain," in her forthcoming paper, the inconsistency of their appeal. It will be a document that will stir the English heart or we are greatly mistaken in the trenchant power of Mrs. Stowe's eloquent pen.—N. Y. Ew. Post.
